

To settle this we bought medical rubber gloves in an attempt to increase the friction between our hands and Triballs, allowing for a firmer grip. Although it did help improve our Load efficiency, the issue of one pause between Loads remained unresolved at this stage.

Later, we had a discussion with the high scoring teams: 8825 S and 81988 E from ShangHai Hongkou.

They told us the main reason is the delay in grabbing the Triballs.

TIPS:

If we could ensure our eyes focus on Triballs storage and rely solely on muscle memory to release the Triballs, we could be able to catch the Triballs in time, achieve a smooth sequence of Loads.

We soon started practicing in coordince with this approach, and eventually we were able to elimiate the pause between Loads. However, there are still some minor issues in certain situations, such as not removing our hands quickly enough after placing, causing Triball to be knocked off by our elbow. So we need to practice more.
